

Father's Day Gift Ideas

Versatile Label Printer Can Help Dad Get Organized

(NAPSA)—Necessity may be the mother of invention, but invention is the father of terrific gifts. There are plenty of inventive ideas to be found on store shelves, but it also requires more than a touch of creativity on the part of the gift giver to make sure that the present and the recipient are a perfect fit.

Versatile gifts, such as computer accessories, can be a smart option for Father's Day. That's because they allow Dad to indulge his fascination with electronics, as well as offering numerous applications to suit the individual user.

Whether Dad's preferences run to pedigreed pooches or pound dogs, vintage Chardonnays or the house red, a new PC/Mac-based label printer gives him the opportunity to print virtually anything that can be created on a computer onto a laminated label, catering to both disorganized Dads and their most meticulous counterparts.

For example, with a Brother P-Touch PT-1500pc:

- Anglers can easily see the difference between their Timber Doodles and Jigheads;
- Collectors can organize baseball cards or title an antiquarian library; and
- Constructive types can separate their nuts from their bolts.

In addition, if Dad dotes on an elaborate entertainment center

Computer accessories cater to both disorganized dads and their most meticulous counterparts.

with wires going from who knows where to who knows what, the PT-1500pc comes in handy with 19 label color combinations.

The affordable P-Touch model connects directly to your PC and has innumerable home and office applications, such as organizing folders, making nametags and decorating CD jewel cases. Label making is a snap: just print, peel and stick.

The PT-1500pc is fun and easy to use, with simple software that any Dad—even those who aren't technologically inclined—can install. Priced at only $80, it has the decorative component of a picture frame face.
